RESEARCH:

Current Research Activities:

I am completing work on an NSF-funded project to examine why resource conflict is not evident in Azerbaijan despite the fact that this country exhibits key features cited in the resource conflict literature. Data from a survey of 1200 citizens on their views of the oil industry, perceptions of environmental quality, and political activity will complement a second dataset derived from in-depth interviews in which people were asked to elaborate on these themes. I am using these data to examine four research questions regarding the apparent lack of conflict in this context. Results from this project suggest that a focus on resource conflict may not be as useful as investigating human security, investment patterns and trends in public participation as more precise process categories linked to resource conditions.
