II. Identification of Areas That Must Be Addressed:

At this time, there are no areas that must be addressed prior to the next accreditation visit to maintain accreditation

III. Relevant Facts and Assessment of Strengths and Weaknesses in Support of the Team Accreditation Recommendation

- A. Situational analysis: The School, like many others, is facing declining enrollment in its full-time MBA program and State support may decline in the future. Additionally, the School will have a large number of retirements.
- B. Changes impacting Eligibility Criteria: There are no changes that are likely to affect eligibility.
- C. The School has an appropriate mission statement and strategic plan. It also has in place a number of initiatives consistent with its plan. The plan is consistent with the goals of the University.
- D. Intellectual contributions are consistent with the School's mission.
- E. The School's Budget is relatively low given the number of students served. However, student and faculty satisfaction is high and there do not appear to be major adverse consequences related to the level of support.
- F. In terms of continuous improvements, the School has undertaken a comprehensive review of its MBA program and its masters programs. It has also added enrichment activities related to its new freshman admission initiative.

- G. Students admitted to the undergraduate major are of high quality. The School has taken steps to increase the quality of students in the full-time MBA and average GMAT scores have increased by 90 points.
- H. Faculty sufficiency is consistent with Standard 9 and classification of faculty appears to be appropriate
- I. Faculty quality is consistent with the School's mission. There is considerable emphasis on research and faculty members publish a significant number of articles in peer-reviewed journals. Promotion requires publications in the very top journals.
- J. Assurance of Learning: The School has an adequate system related to assurance of learning. Results are reviewed and appropriate actions are taken if shortcomings are revealed.

IV. Commendations of Strengths, Innovations, Unique Features and Effective Practices

- A. Commendations for Strengths, Innovations, and Unique Features: In terms of strengths, the school has an innovative freshman admission program that includes course work and peer as well as staff advising. It also has a new honors program for undergraduates, a revamped and innovative full-time MBA program and commendable career services for both undergraduates and MBAs. Elective classes are relatively small which has great appeal to students.
- B. The School has an overall strong faculty who are dedicated to teaching and research.

V. Opportunities for Continuous Improvement

The following are not relevant to the maintenance of accreditation, but may be useful in the context of continuous improvement.

- A. The School is in need of new facilities and is currently engaged in a fund-raising campaign. A significant percentage of the expected cost has already been contributed to the project.
- B. The School is working on refining its approach to assurance of learning. In particular, the peer review team recommends that the number of learning goals be reduced and the process simplified.
- C. PhD placements appear to be somewhat weak for a School with KU's talent and aspirations. More joint research between faculty and PhD students may help improve the situation.
- D. The School should consider developing both degree and non-degree executive education programs. Most likely, these programs will be conducted in Kansas City.
